JR BERLIN LETTER.

political world of Germany is looking forward with great suspense to the visit of the czar Alexander, who is to arrive reference at Berlin, for the Czar is anxious to be met by a whole diplomatic staff. Count Schouvaloff will likewise represent his own Government of councillors, secretaries, and attachés at the Berlin foreign office prepares to take the honours," and receive the guests by the Emperor. The expediency of the Conference has been suggested by Russia, and the monarchs of Servia and Montenegro to whom the Emperor has with impunity, now thinks the time has come for winding up her clever operations against them and Montenegro having been all the while busy with impunity, now thinks the time has come for winding up her clever operations against them and their men across the frontier and the Turks without a formal declaration of war. The Turks were prevented from intervening in Serbia and Montenegro, on the ground that no formal declaration of war had been issued; they gradually assumed a complex position, and the Turk may be expected to make such concessions as were required of him.

The question now at issue is, whether Serbia will be contented to withdraw her forces from the Balkans.

he is making ready to carry out an important item in the Russian program, on condition of Austria's withdrawal from the Balkans, is in hand with her at Constantinople to ensure the realization of her plan for a joint occupation of Bosnia and Herzegovina by Austrian and Turkish troops. The Austrians are to enter the Turkish provinces for a time, to prevent the Turkish reaction from interfering with the treaty. It is to be understood that the treaty is to be underwritten by the dominant powers, the United States and the associated countries. Turkish troops are to stay, too, which is in progress; the question as to whether the Turkish withdrawal or not is already one of the delicate points to be raised in the next conference. Meanwhile, Austrian forces in Dalmatia and Croatia are being so rapidly reinforced that the Viceroy has forbidden details to be ly information respecting the purpose of the impending Conference is indirectly furnished by an article in the Berlin Norddeutsche allgemeine Zeitung, the official gazette of the province of Prussia, under the signature Bismarck. After a few preliminary remarks upon the blessing of the three emperors' alliance, the inspired journal pro-

The reform programme drawn up by the Austrian Government in agreement with the Porte contained only the most essential changes to be effected in the Ottoman lands. Neither the authority of the Sultan nor the integrity of the Turkish Empire was in any degree threatened by the Austrian draft. It was mainly left to the Porte to create a new population subject to the provisions of international law, to accept the rights of religion being advised by the unanimous voice of Europe, they were adopted by the Porte, which undertook a solemn engagement towards the Powers and towards the Porte, moreover, in maintaining to carry out the programme approved by the Powers, distinctly acknowledging

Nikita will expect a reward on me for his services. It is not likely that I will choose to disappoint a Prince, and even so long her pensioner, and he has done nothing the last twelve months to merit good opinion; but it is more probable that Austria's consent can be obtained, and an arrangement which gives additional security to a dangerous neighbour. Perhaps, the king may have a word to say, though I allow myself to be restrained from writing with Montenegro as she wishes, she is sending troops to her western post, and now is believed to have some 50,000 men near Poeth, independently of

One panic follows another on the Exchange, as every day brings fresh alarming reports of an approaching disaster in the East. Unfortunately these apprehensions do not prove altogether unfounded: the massacre in Bosnia, which last confined to raids undertaken by Servino's bands, has now extended over all of Croatia. For the last two weeks, almost severe engagements have taken place in the district of insurrection. The battle practised by the insurgents and the army defy all description. An official bulletin announces that several villages in Slavonia were set on fire, and two garrisons burnt alive. In Peruovo an insurgent and his wife and four children shot SAUJORA SKINS.—Talking of the pea-sausage reminds one of the way in which a sufficiency of skins were obtained in Germany to hold the multitude of sausages that were made during the war. The supply of skins soon fell short, and the Government supposed that they were made of artificial parchment—paper dipped in sulphuric acid. For the purpose, but there was no way of cementing the skins together, and the Government was obliged to order an expedition of cooking the sausages with a photographic film. It is well known that if gelatine is mixed with a chemical solution of potassium cyanide, it will upon the slightest contact upon the mixture, and render it insoluble, so that all that was necessary was to press the sausage into forms, dip them into bichromated gelatine, and hang up to dry. Upon the skin, however, the cyanide solution was not so strong, and the sausage could be sliced or otherwise cooked without its covering being injured in the least.

THE DOMINION OF FIJI.
By HARDY LEE.
No. VIII.

It seems to be taken for granted in Fiji, as in Queensland, that "the white labourer" (so we call him) who is engaged to work on a plantation, is a man who cherishes accuracy for the sake of convenience) is unsuitable to the plantations. In the first place, it is said to be too expensive; but this has never been proved, and it is quite possible that such labour may be found in the long run to be even less costly than the employment of what we are accustomed to call "the lower races." Not always are the wages and an inferior diet the cheapest in the end.

In the second place it has been asserted that white men are unable to bear outdoor labour in the tropics, but this also requires to be proved. Not many men remain here as we have got against the assertion. Carpenters and others work out of doors, in Fiji, during, at least, as many hours as those which make up the mechanic's day in the colonies, and not a few of our more energetic planters have followed the pough of the English and put on very heavy toil, without including themselves and their families. It is easier to stand the wind and tide than to make headway against a settled opinion; and whatever may be the true relative value of the two kinds of labour, we may take it for granted that Fiji will seek after coolies for plantation work. Let it here be observed, that the word "coolies" is a misapprehension, that the word "cooling" is simply a contraction of the word "cooling" and "labourers," whomever they may be obtained—whether they be native Fijians or imported from other lands.

As to the former, the settlers soon discovered that they were not to be depended upon for a constant supply of plantation hands. Certain chiefs, it is true, turned an honest penny occasionally by making requisitions on the tribes under their control for a quota of men, whom they disposed of to the "labour-agents" and others for a stated term, and at a rate of payment which was a matter of agreement between the chief and his customer. At this payment the men so disposed of were the nominal recipients. The chief received ready-money on delivery of his men, and made a further profit out of them by begging a portion of their wages from them on their return at the end of the term of service. It need scarcely be explained that a chief begging from his subjects is a powerful argument for compliance on their part.

The Fiji Government also (by which, of course, is meant the old Government under Cakobau Rex") came to the aid of the planters by furnishing them on similar terms with convicted criminals and defaulting taxpayers. To these were subsequently added a number of heathen mountaineers, prisoners of war, who had been duly tried by jury and found guilty of rebellion against a sovereign, to whom and to whose forerunners neither they nor their fathers had ever owed allegiance. This was an arrangement convenient alike to the planters and to the Government. It did something towards supplying the demand for labour, and it enriched the authorities with an easy and profitable method of dealing with their troublesome subjects.

When he took the reins of office, he found so much of this unpleasant work already done to his credit, that he will submit dutifully to it. It will, it must assuredly be the result of the sharp lessons by which the late authorities taught them that they could be reached and punished even in their most inaccessible mountain fastnesses.

If it be granted that the war was not unavoidable, or at least that it was unavoidable, and that the case demanded punishment beyond that inflicted by the warfare itself, it is not easy to see on what grounds we can blame the government for the manner in which they discharged their duty to their prisoners. They let them out on hire to the planters. What other and what better could they have done with them?

All these supplies of Fijian labour, however, were insufficient to meet the demand, and it is probable that this demand will never few anxiously supplied. In the islands are the coconut abounds, he can make as much in a fortnight, if he choose to cultivate, as a planter could afford to give him for a year of service. But it is he does not want to make money, excepting he has his taxes to pay, or when he see some article which strikes his eye. As laying by a store against a rainy day, this is not utterly foreign to his ideas, but also not to impossible in a community like that to which he belongs. If he were come to possession of £100 to-day he would probably have but little of it left to-morrow. That he did not spend at once his wealth he begged from him, and all his kindness (in our words, all his clan) would help him to do so. He would have been a man of large size with whom communistic ideas would still cling enough to form the rule of the house, a little incentive to personal exertion would that which is necessary to supply the daily wants; and whether in excess of these wants, calling for a larger estate, be desirable or not, is perhaps the least important question. He would have been a man who would have been a man of large size with whom communistic ideas would still cling enough to form the rule of the house, a little incentive to personal exertion would that which is necessary to supply the daily wants; and whether in excess of these wants, calling for a larger estate, be desirable or not, is perhaps the least important question. all our evils be for us in the end, it would be hard for us to be the careless apathy of the Egyptian toward the golden man on the one hand, or the feverish hurry-rushes on the other. This life may be more than an unwilling to give, but it certainly is a worthy terrible struggle we are making with it; and such social problems wherever civilization has brought us face to face, and for which our political economy, with its theories of Every man for himself, stands helpless, may mean the only real solution in that fundamental principle of the gospel which substitutes the tribe for the individual.

But where the Fijian's aversion to constant work for her to be a mark of wisdom or of folly is a fact which aversion remains, and is more likely remain in spite of all the attractions which the planters' service can offer him. Some months ago the Fijian Times published an elaborate leading article on the manifold blessings which regular employment under white men would pour upon the natives. "We affirm," says this editorial, "that the planters could afford to pay these men £3 a year." If this affirmation, correct or not, there seems to be no reason to suppose it was any conclusion that, unless inducements more powerful than the rate of wages could be found, it is not likely that the Fijians will offer themselves as plantation hands.

On the whole, there can be no doubt that, if the necessary for the settlers to employ coolies, they will have to import it; and the conclusion as remains before us—"Whence shall we have a labour market to be supplied?"

On the other hand, the Government are to be blamed under the present system of appointing magistrates, if it were not for the well-deserved fear of consequences, there would probably be no more than a few magistrates who are not studying decisions in civil cases than in criminal cases, and who are not aware that the terrible word "costs" ever comes into a criminal vision.

Brisbane, which for so many years has profited by any direct benefit from the railway through the adverse influence of local landowners, and the small steps of the city-fifty miles from her centre, is now beginning to derive palpable advantages from the line in her door; of these, the most important to the city, as well as to the corporate funds, is the fact the completion of the Oxley bridge has resulted in bringing down the water level of the river, and the fact that the marginal hinterland used is attributable the other fact, that in Brisbane is one of the driest cities in the world; while the rapid wearing away of new land constant recurring necessity for repairs perpetual drain upon the city revenues. All the world is reading—and rug with pleasure and a sense of gratitude to the writer—the two volumes of "The Life and Letters of Lord Macaulay," by his nephew, George Otto Trevelyan, M.P. Relationship, fiction,

"He was perfectly aware of 1847; and the fact, he convinced that his honour required that should take no steps to render himself a acceptable candidate for re-election while time should arrive. On the pedlars and rascals of public life, who earn a precarious livelihood by trafficking in small local intrigues, and dealing in the petty wares of jealousies—the costermongers of consciences—be would doubtless look with a scorn as immeasurable as his genius. In his eyes all such fellows profaned public life, and inflicted immense injury upon society, by selling the prizes and distinctions of the com-
